Education	Masters with Thesis in Islamic Studies (Prophetic Traditions and Hadith Sciences) – Excellent (2019) Faculty of Darul Ulum, Cairo University, Egypt Thesis Title: "The Scholarly Contributions of the Indian Hadith Scholar Sheikh Muhammad Tahir (d. 986 AH) to Prophetic Tradition Studies" (Arabic). Overview of the Thesis This study provides a comprehensive analysis of the scholarly legacy of Sheikh Muḥammad Ṭāhir al-Hindī (d. 986 AH/1578 CE), a preeminent Indian ḥadīth scholar whose works significantly advanced the science of Prophetic traditions (‘ulūm al-ḥadīth). Focusing on his methodological approaches to takhrij (narration sourcing), dirāyah (critical analysis), and ta’līq (annotative commentary), the research illuminates how al-Hindī addressed critical gaps in ḥadīth authentication during the 10th/16th century—a period marked by both intellectual renewal and regional scholarly exchange between South Asia and the Arab world. Special attention is given to his seminal works, including [insert key titles, e.g., Tadhkirat al-Mawḍū‘āt] and their role in countering fabricated (mawḍū‘āt) narrations while preserving weak (ḍa‘īf) yet historically valuable chains. By situating his contributions within broader networks of ḥadīth transmission (particularly via Mecca and Medina), the thesis argues for al-Hindī’s understudied influence on later Ottoman and Mughal scholarly circles. Finally, it evaluates the contemporary relevance of his methodologies for modern ḥadīth criticism, digital archiving, and curriculum development in traditional Islamic seminaries (madāris).
